But it's really hard to know what is too much or too little. I just asked for a list of hotkeys and I was swamped with 40-50 suggestions. I also have a lot of different programs that I've installed and/or downloaded over time, so it's difficult to know where one starts and another stops. I'm not a pro at this, but I'm going

Screen capture macros recorded to executable files, and can be distributed as web links. Every macro is recorded on the recording file. No extra software is required. 1. Keymacro use is just the keyboard, without mouse. 2. It is easy to edit and modify macros. 3. The macros can be scheduled to be run at a specific time, run them in a loop, pause between each loop, play from the start of the recorded sequence or re-play a sequence that is paused or completed. 4. Using macros, you can record to any folder, and that any file to capture. 5. All of the recorded macros are recorded to a single file. You can generate any number of macros and then burn them to DVD. 6. Keyboard macros can run multiple windows to capture. 7. If the audio is not recognized, it can be saved into a WAV or MPA file. 8. A ScreenCapture.ini file is created automatically to hold a list of Macros, Recording, and Timing information. 9. Scheduled macros can be run with a single press of the keyboard. 10. Use keymacro in a loop so you can capture the same image several times in succession. 11. Keymacro can be distributed as URL or email links that can be opened in a browser. 12. You can record the Screenshot to a.scr file, and download the file to the computer. 13. You can record the Screenshot to a.txt file. It can be viewed with Notepad. 14. If you need to alter the macro file, you can change the recorded sequences in the.txt file.
