Hi Avery,

Ok, so your not just shooting endlessly downloaded images, but getting lots of really great images out of it too!

But you have to have a pretty fast machine/ancillary to workflow to do it!

Now I'm afraid that the key is really relying on Lightroom to shoot RAW and I'd imagine that this is the reason you can't afford a full version. Ah well, some things are just beyond the arms reach of most folk I guess - not that I'm not envious, I'd love to have access to all of the Lightroom tools and features!

I'd love to be even to get access to those, and would certainly come and check out your site for some great advice.

Excellent, I look forward to trying all of these out (in due course);

Adam Of all the Mac tools offered in the pro kit, this is the one I'm most excited about. The updated Photoshop CC 2017 has a new interface with lots of controls on the right side, more presets, new brushes, and everything I liked about older CC. It has a better look and feel of what I expect from an industry-standard studio tool, especially for those who like to tootle around using a bunch of brushes and presets. I think it makes me look a lot better. Particularly in the case where I'm doing something like retouching bricks on a wall. The Mac version of Adobe Photoshop is a great tool for professionals. Lightroom does not claim to be a replacement and it does not try to be, but it is a very complete tool for the Mac platform. Most people I encounter are acquainted with Photoshop through the PC version.
